Stamps from the Underground

Solidarity plays post office and earns a profit

A red skeletal hand is pictured reaching across the border from the Soviet Union into Poland. On the wrist in small print are the Polish letters for iodine 131. If this sounds like a futuristic thriller of the Ray Bradbury Fahrenheit 451 genre, it is not, although the overtones of underground publishing in a repressive society are evocatively similar. It is in fact an illicit commemorative "postage" stamp produced by Solidarity, the banned Polish trade-union movement, and it depicts the radioactive waste spewed across much of Eastern and Western Europe by last April's Chernobyl nuclear disaster.

Both in Poland and in the West, Solidarity's philatelic frauds have become collector's items. The unofficial Chernobyl stamp is only one of many politically provocative imprints that the underground has issued to raise funds and tweak the regime of Communist Party Chief Wojciech Jaruzelski and, in some cases, the Soviets. Since the stamps are illegal, they are not honored by the Polish state postal system, but some sympathetic postal workers do clandestinely post-mark them.

Striking workers in the Gdansk shipyards fashioned the first crude protest stamps by hand in 1980. Later, after the 1981 imposition of martial law, stamps were made by prisoners in internment camps. Since then production has burgeoned: underground sources estimate that a variety of illegal presses will churn out roughly 225 different stamps this year alone, usually in print runs of 5,000 to 10,000 each.

A combination of public sympathy and shrewd marketing has helped Solidarity play post office. "The printer is paid 10% of the value of the stamps he produces," says Marek, 30, a Solidarity stamp dealer. "Distribution costs about 20% more, leaving a 70% profit. This is put back into publishing banned books and newspapers."

Stamps portraying the Polish Pope John Paul II, Solidarity Leader Lech Walesa and caricatures of Jaruzelski have been particularly popular. Increasingly, anti-Soviet stamps abound. An album:

The union's creations: not really for mailing

► Several sets mark the sixth anniversary of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. One imprint portrays Afghan mujahedin resistance fighters battling Soviet troops. Another shows a burning candle and bears the slogan AFGHANISTAN/POLAND: SOLIDARITY

IN THE FIGHT AGAINST COMMUNISM.

► Two stamps in somber brown and white honor dissident Soviet Physicist Andrei Sakharov and his wife Yelena Bonner.

► A bold three-stamp set, distributed on a card showing the red, white and blue American flag, salutes President Ronald Reagan, the Statue of Liberty and friendship between Solidarity and the U.S. trade-union umbrella group, the AFL-CIO.

► Another stamp bears a portrait of George Orwell, author of antitotalitarian classics such as Nineteen Eighty-Four and Animal Farm.

Montag, the book-burning fireman in Fahrenheit 451, came to take secret enjoyment from the objects of his repression. Apparently Poland's rulers do not feel the same way about the Solidarity stamps, but they have not seen the need to act so harshly against them either. The regime last week unexpectedly approved penal-code changes covering some political offenses, including unauthorized printing, reducing the maximum penalty for such offenses from the present three-to-five years to three months in prison. A deputy in the Polish Parliament reportedly said the change in the law came about because of a "systematic decrease" in such crimes. In fact, evidence suggests that stamp making, at least, is on the rise. ■

In questo speciale foglietto, il francobollo polacco è a sinistra con il relativo annullo particolare di Varsavia che riproduce l'eroico comandante Modcecai Anilevitz. Sullo sfondo del foglietto è visibile una parte del monumento dedicato ai combattenti del ghetto ed eretto sia a Varsavia che nei giardini del museo di Yad Vashem, a Gerusalemme.
