INTRODUCTION

Ecuador, on the Pacific coast of South America, is a land of steaming jungles and snow-capped Andean peaks. More than twenty active volcanoes tower over the towns and villages, while vividly colored birds and lush tropical flowers enliven the countryside. Nature, in Ecuador, presents violent contrasts; and its politics have been marked with conflicts equally as dramatic. Ecuador's natural political and economic scene is mirrored in its stamps.

From the time Ecuador became an independent republic in 1830, many political factions have sought power. Each faction had its spokesman—those who favored confederation with other South American states, those who rejected it, those who favored the aristocracy and a strong clergy, and those who opposed both. Among these major spokesmen were Juan Jose Flores, a friend of Bolivar who fought against the Royalists and became Ecuador's first president; and Vicente Rocafuerte, the nation's second president who led the opposition against Flores' aristocratic policies.

While Ecuador issued stamps commemorating the men who shaped its history, the productive activities of its people were also recognized. Several stamp designs reflect the country's agricultural economy, with tobacco, cacao, and sugar cane as the subjects. Another issue shows hat weavers at work—Panama hats are made in Ecuador.

The ancient Indian tribes who specialized in shrunken heads, the iguanas of the Galapagos Islands, the volcanic mountains of Chimborazo and Cotopaxi—these, too, are part of the fascinating story revealed in the stamps of Ecuador.
