But to benefit from the increased value of the stamps the ex-Ustasias had to emerge from hiding to sell them. Here they ran foul of Tito's political police (a high-ranking member of which announced at the time: "We are now in a position to settle old scores no matter where the criminals hide."

The Croats struck back, and agents of intelligence up. One Croat from whom Father Draganovich had borrowed money

But to make his profit, von Metzger had to re-sell them and this proved more difficult than

1918—continued

Overprinted as last and surcharged in addition

After the occupation of Constantinople by the Allies in 1918, some of the ROPIT agencies were re-opened and in anticipation of a shipping revival the Co. got its stock of Russian Levant stamps with the initials and many these were further surcharged in the depreciated Turkish currency, the ships did not arrive and the agencies closed. The stamps were sold but never served any postal purpose.
