MILLENNIUM 1750-1800

1. At the age of 16, Catherine married the future Peter III, who, a year after he became emperor in 1762, was considered in a coup of East Catherine, then thirty three, became empress, and sought to combine Peter's plan of introducing Russia to Western European culture.

1774, the English scientist Joseph Priestley's discovery of oxygen. He isolated oxygen by heating mercuric oxide because of his experimental work on acids. He called it "dephlogisticated air".

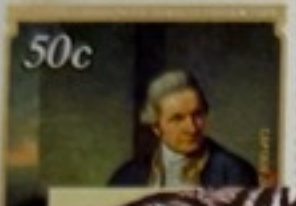

1796, Edward Jenner (1753-1826), also known as the father of vaccines, spent his childhood as a country doctor in the village of Stratton, Gloucestershire. Before Jenner, smallpox was a killer disease, with the majority of the victims being children and young adults. In 1796, as a result of his discovery, the world's first vaccine was created, "the world's first vaccine".

1754, the French and Indian War. "Seven Years War" was the name given to the conflict between the British, the French, and the Indians. The war began in the Ohio River valley. In February 1754, the British were ordered to build a fort in the area. The French were also ordered to build a fort in the same area. The war ended in 1763 with the Treaty of Paris.

1766, Jean-François Argenson (1719-1784), French politician of Louis XV's court, was a philosopher and writer of the "Encyclopédie". He was a member of the Académie des Sciences. He was a member of the Académie des Sciences. He was a member of the Académie des Sciences.

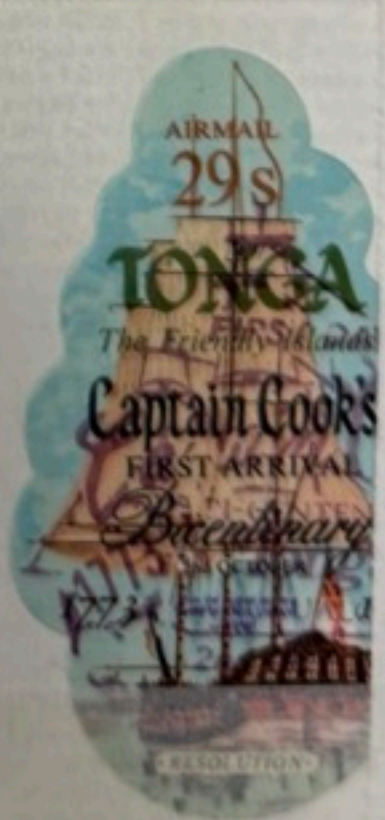

1770, Louis XVI (1754-1793), French king, married Marie Antoinette (1755-1793), French queen. They were married on October 16, 1770. They were married on October 16, 1770. They were married on October 16, 1770.
