M/s Morris & Co. (Chester) Ltd.,

INDIA has, through the ages, produced many great men and women; but none, surely, greater than Mohandas Karamchand Gandhi. He was great in the nobility of the truths that he preached; great in the magnitude of his public achievements and great in the simplicity and selflessness of his personal life.

As a young man seeking justice for the Indians in South Africa he evolved the method of action that will for ever be associated with his name - Satyagraha, passive resistance. With this he returned to India, where his countrymen were striving to free themselves from British rule. He gave them his gospel of truth and non-violence, put courage into their hearts, steeled their will to revolt, and led them ultimately, after years of suffering and sacrifice, to their goal of Independence.

To Mahatma Gandhi, national liberation did not, however, mean only the breaking of the chains of political slavery. It meant also the elevation of the 'Untouchables', the Harijans, the lowest of the lowly, to a place of honour and dignity. And it meant the entire programme of economic betterment, of self-help and self-sufficiency, that was epitomised in his advocacy of the Charka.

Towards the end, his life was almost wholly devoted to the promotion of better relations between Hindus and Muslims. Holding all religions in respect, he saw them not as barriers between one community and another, but as the supreme solvent of barriers, binding men together in mutual charity and tolerance.

He was born at Porbander, in Kathiawar, in 1869, 79 years ago, but he belongs not to Kathiawar or to India, but to the whole world. In an age shaken by violence and greed and fear, millions in every Country acknowledged him as foremost amongst those who showed them the way to a sane and ethical mode of life.

On January 30, 1948, in New Delhi, an assassin's bullet put an end to his life. But his memory is imperishable; it will be as a beacon and an inspiration so long as men continue to fight for truth against falsehood, for freedom from tyranny, and for justice and brotherliness against violence and oppression.
