BI-TERRITORIAL POSTMARKS.

Prior to the establishment of the Provisional Government in 1922, several small post offices in Co. Donegal and other counties to come under the control of the new government were administered as sub-offices, by district offices located in counties that were to become Northern Ireland. Steel handstamps inscribed in English continued to be used until new ones inscribed in Gaelic were supplied. In many cases the district office name was excised from the handstamp. until such times as the new handstamps became available.

Back-stamped.

The English handstamp used at Moville, Co. Donegal 26 February 1923, retains the Londonderry district office marking.

LIFFORD, Co DONEGAL

STRABANE, CO TYRONE

The English handstamp with the district office STRABANE removed, used at Ballintra, Co. Donegal, 5, June 1935.

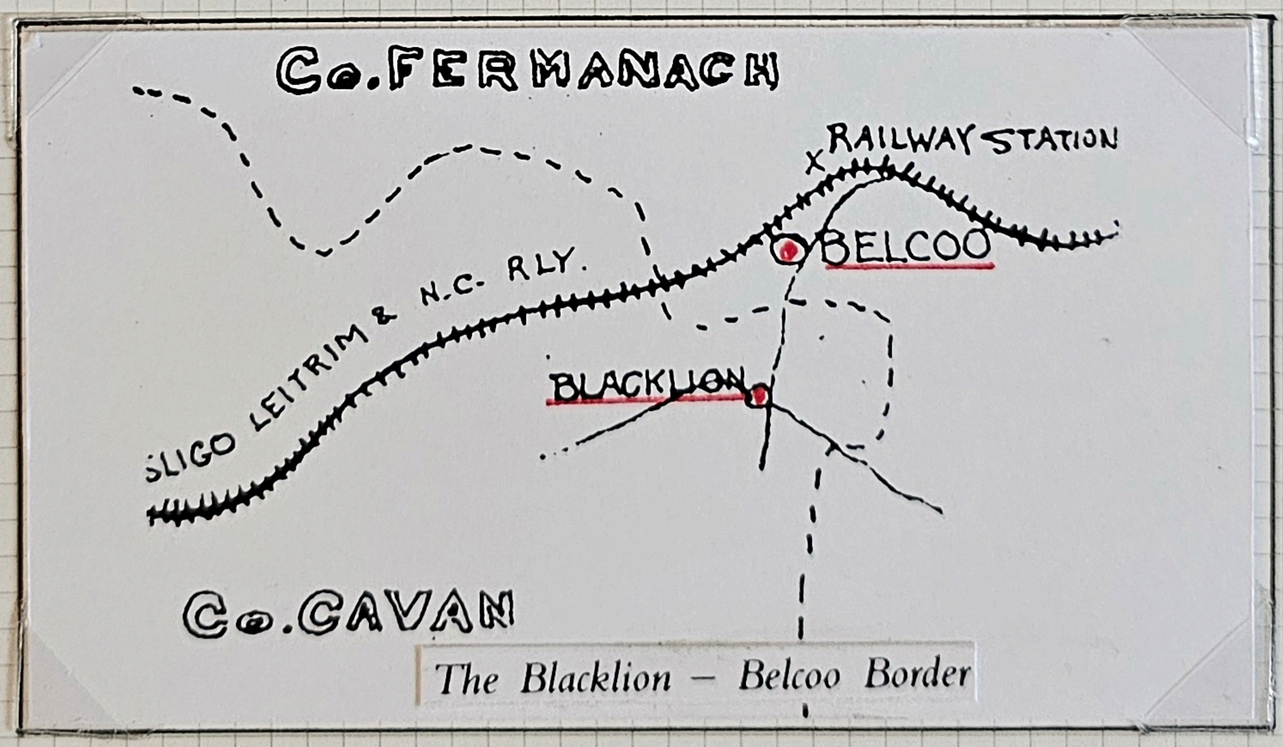

IRELAND

TRANSITIONAL PERIOD

Under the terms of the Treaty of December 1921, Ireland had been partitioned both politically and geographically, with defined borders. Postally, all the borders were not totally defined until April 1, 1927. In consequence for a few remote areas, the Irish Free State postmen delivered mail into Northern Ireland while in others, the Northern Ireland postmen delivered the post into the Free State.

Blacklion, Co, Cavan to Dublin. January 17, 1923.

The Blacklion – Belcoo Border

For some of these border villages situated within the Irish Free State, mail destined for other Free State addresses was carried in sealed bags via N. Ireland For example the mail from Blacklion, Co. Cavan and addressed to Dublin was transferred across the border to Belcoo, Co. Fermanagh (N.I.), then to Enniskillen and finally by train to Dublin. Since all such mail was in sealed bags there was no transit markings applied en route.

2. Lifford (Customs Centre) – Strabane R.S. (both directions): To be operated by the Irish Free State.

This route simply consisted of a short stretch of railway line and the mail was to be carried by "Rail Trolley propelled by postmen". There were to be six crossings a day:

Sackville Street after the Conflict

Nowhere was the awful destruction of Easter Week so evident as in Sackville Street (now O'Connell Street). By the week-end most of the major buildings were in ruins and almost all of the remaining structures had been damaged beyond repair.

But this noble street would be rebuilt and would be regarded as one of the finest thoroughfares in Europe—a fitting compliment to a new era of freedom.
