Rowland Hill's pamphlet "Post Office Reform" was published in 1837, advocating a uniform postage charge of one penny per ½ ounce within the United Kingdom, without regard to distance. He proposed that postage would be prepaid by means of an adhesive label. A Bill presented in The House received Royal Assent in August 1839. On January 10, 1840 the Penny Post became law and the first stamps were available on May 6, 1840.

Cover posted May 15, 1840 to Ireland, backstamped May 16 arrival in red.

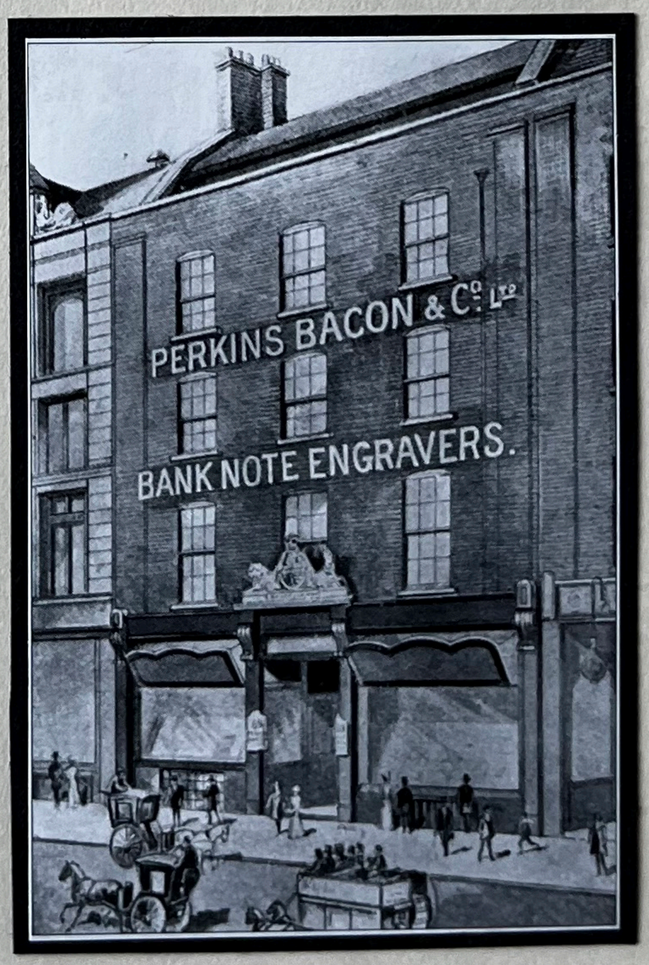
"PENNY BLACK"

The portrait of Queen Victoria is based on the City Medal, struck to commemorate Her Majesty's visit to Guildhall on 9th November 1837. The designer was William Wyon, Chief Engraver of seals to the Queen, and Engraver to the Mint.

The stamps were line engraved and printed by Messrs. Perkins, Bacon & Petch on hand-made paper supplied by Stacey Wise of Hardington. A small crown watermark was used as a protection against forgery.



GREAT BRITAIN

"Penny Post" postmarks were applied at the receiving offices, the stamp being obliterated at the Head Office.

A London-based Irish businessman by the name of Henry Archer brought notice to the Government of the advantages of having an easy method of separating stamps. In the late 1840's he experimented with two rouletting machines, both of which were failures, although a few copies survived. Following repairs and alterations to a third machine, Archer crated perforations as we know them today. The Government approved this method and purchased Archer's patents in June 1853.

EARLY BRITISH POSTMARKS

In use from 1840 to 1844, the "Maltese Cross" design was the first to be used to obliterate British stamps. A red ink was first used but, following earlier experiments in February 1841, was superseded by black ink. Postmarks of this type, numbered 1 to 12 in the centre, were used at the London Chief Office in 1843 and 1844.

LARGE CROWN WATERMARK ERRORS

The large crown watermark bits were stamped out of sheet brass and affixed to the wire gauze of the paper mold. The "errors" resulted from the insertion in the dandy roll of two new bits, presumably hand-made, appearing normally on stamps lettered MA and TA.

KING EDWARD VIII

Edward,Prince of Wales, acceded the British throne on January 20, 1936 following the death of his father, King George V.

Within days, the Post Office took steps to prepare designs for the postage stamps of the new reign.

A definitive issue consisting of the four most commonly used values was chosen. The design was the suggestion of 18-year old H. J. Brown of Torquay,a student at the local Technical school, and the portrait was taken from a photograph by Hugh Cecil.

Born: June 26, 1894

Died: May 28, 1972

H.M. KING EDWARD VIII

KING EDWARD VIII

The issued stamps were printed on highly glazed paper made by Portals (John Allen) Ltd., and perforated 15 x 14. The watermark "E8R" marked the first time that an arabic numeral had been used rather than a roman, it being felt that the use of "VIII" might weaken the paper too much.

Inverted watermarks: not known on the 2½d. value.

The extreme simplicity of the design made the issue suitable for reproduction by photogravure, and this was carried out by Harrison & Sons in sheets of 240.

POST OFFICE BOOKLETS

A Sixpence Booklet with a plain buff cover and containing two panes of two 1½ pence stamps, was dispensed by "sixpence in the slot" machines, the first of which at Springfield Road Post Office, New Southgate, London N11, was brought into use on January 23, 1937. Subsequently another 39 machines were installed at various locations. The King Edward VIII booklets remained on sale until December 1937.

FIRST DAY COVERS

It is uncertain why the 1d. stamp was issued 13 days after the other values. There is speculation that sufficient stocks of the 1d. King George V stamp remained on hand.

“Colon” Flaw SG Spec Qcom1C

This flaw, two white dots between “12” and “May,” is found on Cylinder 7, no dot, Row 10, Stamp 1. It was later corrected in the fourth printing of Cylinder 7, no dot.

COIL STRIPS

coil join

The low value KGVI and QEII stamps were printed in sheets of 240 (20 horizontal rows of 12). For some issues, coil strips were made by attaching strips from sheets to one another. Vertical strips would show a coil join every 20 stamps, horizontal strips every 12 stamps.

Some values issued as coils were printed in continuous reels. Due to the format of the sheet stamps, vertical strips of 21 or more, or horizontal strips of 13 or more without a coil join, must be from a coil, and are known as coil proving strips.

SHEET MARGIN CONTROL MARKS

DeLaRue & Co. introduced the control letter in 1884 in order to keep track of printed stamps. Changed every six months, the letter represented the six-month contract period of the printer. The ½d and 1d stamps of King Edward VII were printed with single control letters until 1904 when a number was added to denote the year of printing.
