Certificate of Authenticity

The 1840 Penny Black Stamp

This is to certify that this is an original
1840 Penny Black Stamp

The World's Most Famous Stamps

The Penny Black

Stamps are one of the everyday things which we take so much for granted that it's impossible to visualise a world without them; but little more than 160 years ago sending and receiving letters was a major operation, and a relatively expensive one. Letters were charged according to the distance travelled and the number of sheets (envelopes effectively doubled the postage, so they were hardly ever used). To send a letter from London to Glasgow cost 18 pence – a couple of days' wages for the average man – and it was the recipient who paid, not the sender! Rowland Hill led the campaign for Uniform Penny Postage, arguing that the main cost of the postal service was the cumbersome method of computing postage. A flat rate of a penny, paid by the sender, would slash costs dramatically – but to achieve this he had to devise a method of prepaying postage that did not even require the sender to take the letter to a post office. The answer was 'a label just large enough to bear the stamp and smeared on the back with a glutinous wash' – and so the adhesive postage stamp was born. The Treasury organised a design contest, and although he was not one of the prize-winners, Sir George Mackenzie came closest to what was eventually used – an upright oblong with a portrait of Queen Victoria, with POSTAGE at the top and the value at the foot. The portrait was drawn by Henry Corbould from the effigy of Victoria when she was only 15, and father and son team of Charles and Frederick Heath engraved the die. The stamps were recess-printed by Perkins, Bacon & Petch in sheets of 240 and sold for a penny each, or a row for a shilling and a whole sheet for a pound. Over 70 million Penny Blacks were printed in 1840-1 before the colour was changed to red. This is the world's first and most famous stamp – which makes it highly sought after by collectors the world over.
