SYNTHESE.

Avant-propos.

ENTRE la plaine flamande et la côte Sud de l'Angleterre, les relations maritimes sont vieilles comme le monde. Elles ont consacré une communauté millénaire d'intérêts et de sentiments. Rien n'en fera comprendre la continuité, la nécessité de l'importance que quelques rappels de l'histoire.

— Et ceci débute vers le cinquième millénaire avant le Ckrist, quand l'inondation des basses terres dans la crète de Calais à Douvres commence et que, sous le pilonnement des flots de l'Atlantique, le mur de falaises de Folkestone au Cap Griz-Nez s'écroule. Deux golfes se rejoignent et la mer sépare les vieilles tribus de l'Occident. L'étroit chenal de la Manche deviendra, au cours de millénaires, le théâtre de luttes opiniâtres, en même temps que la route impériale du commerce pacifique du monde.

Les hommes néolithiques longent, avec leurs canots monoxyles, les rives du Pas-de-Calais et amènent leurs produits de pierre en Grande-Bretagne. Les siècles passent. Les peuplades de la mer
