On 26th August 1929 an Experimental Flight took place with the object of speeding up the delivery of mail from incoming liners to England and further afield. The ship concerned here was the German steamer "KARLSRUHE" arriving at Galway from New York, as depicted in the cachet.

The plane used, a Vickers-Vixen left Oranmore Aerodrome (Galway) at 7.30am and after stops at Baldonnell (Dublin) and Sealand (near Liverpool) for fuel arrived Croydon at 11.35am.

GALWAY-BERLIN-SOUTH AMERICA

C.I. Dulin

It is probable that virtually any collector who had an even mild interest in the aerophilately of Ireland has a Galway to Berlin flight cover in his collection. However, more than most, this particular flight is one that has so many aspects, that quite an extensive study may be made on it alone. The objective of this article is to present such a study and also to outline some of the problems that remain to be solved.

Briefly, it was the first `direct` airmail flight from Ireland to the Continent with the aim of speeding up mail from Ireland to Europe and, hopefully, as a precursor to eventual regular services. At that time, of course, all such mail had to be routed by sea to England, thence by train to London where there daily airmail flights to various cities on the Continent.

`Direct` is somewhat of a misnomer, for the flight started on October 22nd, 1932 at 6,33am from Oranmore, near Galway, and 54 minutes later landed at Dublin at 7,27am. This was by a Gypsy Moth piloted by C.E. Armstrong. After about an hour there, during which Dublin mails were loaded and the Galway mail transferred, the journey continued at 8,00am on a Royal Dutch plane [a Fokker piloted by Colonel O.E. Russell with a Mr Scholte - whose full name never appears to have been noted - as co-pilot (1)] for a three hour trip to Croydon, arriving at 10,55am. After a refuelling stop there for three quarters of an hour, it continued on the next leg to Rotterdam, arriving at 1,05pm. It left that airport at 1,45pm and, finally, it reached Berlin the same day at 5,30pm [this is Berlin local time and equates to 4,30pm Dublin time]. No additional mail was loaded at Croydon or Rotterdam. Supposedly, no mail was off-loaded at the refuelling stops.

There was a return flight back to Dublin by the same routing, on October 23rd. The take-off time has been reported as 5,47am with touch down in Dublin at 4,00pm. No mail was carried on the return trip, but Berlin Sunday newspapers of October 23rd, 1932 may be found with A Dublin October 23rd, 1932 arrival cancellation (2).

It has often been stated that the quantity of mail from Galway was 71lbs, which supposedly equated to something in the region of 1,000 items. By contrast, the additional mail loaded at Dublin is not usually noted. However, from a copy of a letter from official sources (3), it seems that a total of 1,900 letters and cards were carried, of which 600 were from Galway and 1,300 from Dublin. From the same source, it is very surprising to learn that ` very small bag of mail from the U.S.A. received from the S.S. Dresden at Galway` was also carried. `The actual quantity cannot be definitely stated by the Dispatching Officer, but it appeared to be only 50`. Thus far, to the author's knowledge, none of this mail has ever been identified.

Although there was a mandatory involvement of the Irish Post Office, it is not generally realised that this flight was, in essence, a private one sponsored by a group of businessmen who contributed some £600 towards its cost. Their motivation was to effect an even speedier service and, indeed, it was demonstrated that some two days could be cut from a surface mail routing and up to a day from surface/airmail via London. Additionally, to defray some of the costs, the flight from Dublin carried passengers [12 to 14 in number, according to various sources, at a fare which has not yet been ascertained]. It is believed passengers were also carried on the return flight. How many there were is not known exactly, but about a dozen seems a reasonable estimate.

IRISH AIRMAIL & ACCEPTANCES.

First Regular Night Services: London - Brussels.

"Sabena Airways" 14th April 1930. Despatched from Dublin.

"Sabena Airways" was founded in 1923 under the joint ownership of the Belgium Government, the major Banks and the Congo Colonial Authorities. Sabena had continued to expand its services throughout Europe, and on the 14th April 1930 commenced a series of night time flights to and from London - Brussels. This service was subsidised by the Belgium Government to assure its success and operate five nights a week. One hundred percent regularity was achieved during the first four months of service and this was mainly due to fine conditions.

Crew/Passengers	Capt. R.P. Mollard, Capt. H.W.C. Alger and crew of 1; no passengers

Circumstances

This was the first experimental flight service to Australia by Imperial Airways. The pilots experienced very strong headwinds on their flight from Sourabaya to Koepang. Running out of fuel 6 miles from their overnight stop they were forced down on very rough ground. The crew escaped without serious injury but the aircraft was completely wrecked.

Mails

The mail was recovered intact. Although a considerable quantity of the 15'000 letters carried from London had been delivered along the route, the mail still made up a weight of some 290 lbs. Imperial Airways immediately made arrangements with Charles Kingsford Smith to forward the mails to Darwin. Smithy, together with his crew G.U. Allan, co-pilot, and F.W. Hewitt, engineer, in his famous 'old Bus', the "Southern Cross", picked up the mails at Koepang on April 25 reaching Darwin the same day. No special markings or cachets were provided to recovered mails. It is reported that 90 letters were accepted in Ireland for this first experimental airmail service to Australia, but mails seen so far suggest that more than 90 Irish covers were carried. However, special Imperial Airways souvenir envelopes used from Ireland are scarce.

On the 22nd October 1932 a First Air Mail was flown from Galway to Berlin via Baldonell for Dublin, Croydon and Rotterdam. This, and the Galway—London of 1929, are the only two Eire covers bearing Cachets, prior to the 1939 Trans-Atlantics, though, of course there are many Acceptances for British flights.

The Cachet, applied in green, reads ' Aer-Post Gaillim—Berlin 22 ad Deire Fomair 1932.' The postmark for Galway is ' Gaillimh 22 X 32 ' and for Dublin ' Baile Atha Cliath 7 am 20 OC 32.' The Berlin air arrival Cachet reads ' Mit Luftpost Befordent/Luftpostamt/Berlin C 2 ' and shows a plane in flight. Covers are backstamped ' Berlin C/ 22.10.32. 18—19/ L 2 *.' The Eire Air Label ' Par Avion/Aer-Phost/ M.P. 25 ' was used.

The Return Flight was made on the 23rd, but no mail was carried. A small package of a Berlin newspaper the " Berliner Tageblatt " for Sunday October 23rd was flown and these were postmarked on arrival at Dublin ' Baile Atha Cliath 7.45 pm 23 OC 32.'

The flight left Galway at 6:33 am on October 22nd arriving in Dublin at 7:27 am. Here the mail was transferred to a Royal Dutch Air Lines plane which already was loaded with the Dublin mail. The plane took off at 8:00 a.m. landing in Croydon for refueling and continued on to Rotterdam and thence to Berlin arriving at 4:30 p.m.

October 22, 1932 Galway to Dublin to Berlin and by Zeppelin to South America

A second mail carrying experiment starting in Galway took place on Saturday October 22, 1932. The purpose of this flight, which also carried passengers, was to promote interest in air travel between Ireland and the continent of Europe. Col. Charles Russell, who had been involved with the first mail flight from Galway to London in 1929, announced at a Rotary meeting in Dublin on October 17th that the required funding of £600 had been donated by business men interested in promoting this venture and that the flights would start on the following Saturday.

Official notice of the flight was released by the Galway Post Office on the 19th of October. It stated that mail up to one ounce per letter would be accepted up to midnight of the 21st for air transmission to Berlin, at an inclusive rate of 6d. A similar notice was published by the Dublin Post Office. Although mail was officially accepted for Berlin only, a few covers may have been unloaded in Rotterdam when the plane made a scheduled fuel stop there.

The flight left Galway at 6:33 a.m. on October 22nd. and arrived in Dublin at 7:27 a.m. This stage of the flight was flown by Mr. O.E. Armstrong in a Fox Moth plane carrying the mail along with two passengers. This mail was transferred to a Royal Dutch Air Lines plane which had already been loaded with the mail posted in Dublin. The plane piloted by Col. Russell and Capt. Scholte took off at 8:00 a.m. with 12 passengers aboard. The plane landed at Croydon at 11:00 a.m. for refueling and continued on to Rotterdam, landing there shortly after 1:00 p.m. Leaving Rotterdam at 1:45 p.m., the flight arrived in Berlin at 4:30 p.m. (5:30 German time).

The covers carried on this flight all contain a special green oval cachet which reads "AER-POST / 22ad diere formair, 1932 / GAILLIM-BERLIN." In addition they bear a round receiving cachet, in red ink, reading "MITLUFTPOST BEFORDERT / LUFTPOSTAMT / BERLIN C2." The covers were backstamped, "BERLIN C / 22. 10.32. 18-19 / L 2". The shading of the green cachets applied in Dublin was much lighter than the ones applied in Galway. Some of the covers have the wording "FIRST FLIGHT" applied in green.

A few covers posted at Galway and carried on this flight were transferred to and flown on the 9th 1932 Zeppelin flight to South America. No mail was carried on the return flight to Galway. However, a few Berlin Sunday newspapers were carried. This venture was unsuccessful in that no further flights were made.

1919 - FIRST ATLANTIC CROSSING LANDS IN BOG

15 June 1919 - After an eventful flight from Lester's Field, St John's, Newfoundland across the Atlantic, Capt. John Alcock and Lieutenant Arthur Whitten-Brown in their converted bomber, a Vickers Vimy, mistook an Irish bog near Clifden as a green field and landed there nose down. They were not hurt and no mail was damaged.

Photo - copy

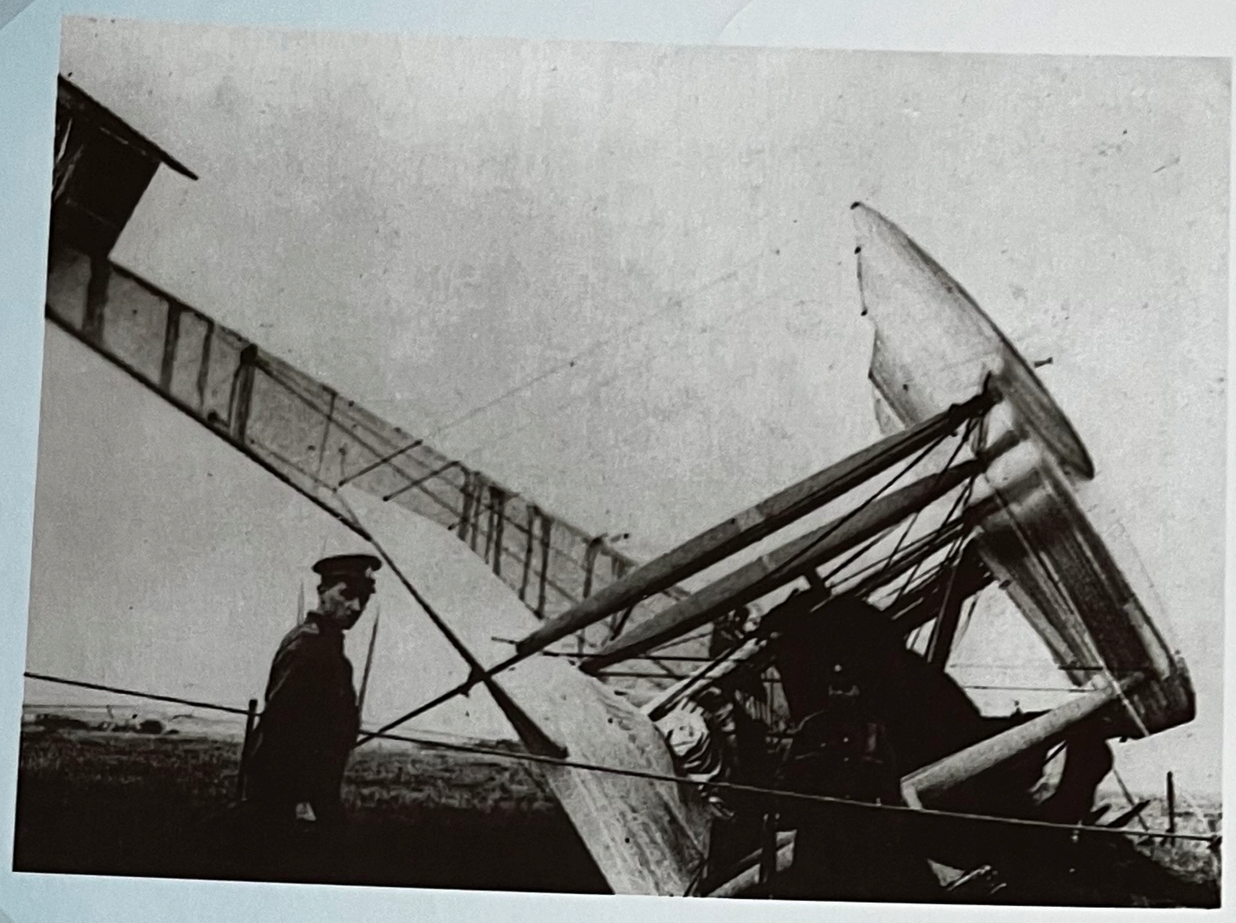

The Newfoundland Postmaster General had 10,000 15 cent 'Cabot' stamps overprinted 'Trans-Atlantic / AIR POST / 1919 / ONE DOLLAR', the proceeds going to the Permanent Marine Disasters Fund. Weight restrictions allowed Alcock and Brown to carry 3 lbs. mail consisting of 196 letters and 1 packet. The mail was posted in St. John's between 10 and 13 June 1919 and used the specially prepared stamp.

On arrival in London, Alcock delivered the mail bag to the Royal Aero Club from where it was despatched to the GPO where all letters addressed to London received an airmail cancellation dated 17 June. Above item has arrival cancellation 'ARCHILTIBUIE GARVE, ROSS-SHIRE 19 JU 19'.

From 1939 to 1945 Foynes, Co. Limerick was the centre of the aviation world. The Foynes Flying Boat Museum commemorates this exciting period in aviation history. The Foynes Museum has undergone major reconstruction, for the purpose of displaying a full scale mock-up of the famous Boeing B 314 Flying Boat.

Four stamps were issued by An Post – The Irish Post Office in 1998 to commemorate Pioneers of Irish Aviation. The stamps were designed by Vincent Killowry. One of the stamps featured Captain Blair and the Sikorsky VS 44A and commemorated the first non-stop commercial flight between Foynes and New York. Captain Charles Blair was famously married to legendary actress Maureen O'Hara, who was heavily involved with the museum and associated events.
